2. SCIENTIFIC INFORMATION

2.1 Tests for COVID-19

There are two tests, on fresh nasal or throat swabs, currently used to detect the presence of COVID-19 virus.

2.1.1 PCR-RT Test: This test employs a laboratory technique known as polymerase chain reaction from which the test gets its name. It offers a precise, very sensitive measure of viral genetic material even when the virus is dead. It is reported as either positive or negative irrespective of the number of COVID-19 particles present, preferably from a high nasal swab. Results from PCR-RT testing take at least 24 hours to report, however in most jurisdictions it is several days before a result is known.

2.1.2 Antigen Tests: Antigen (Ag) testing detects certain viral proteins present in a nose or throat swab. It offers rapid inexpensive testing conducted on-site with an immediate result. While a positive Ag test indicates contagiousness there is also the possibility of a false negative result. If an individual is symptomatic with a negative Ag test, the attending physician will order a PCRRT test.

2.2 Risk Assessment Based on their health risks, each participant shall evaluate her/his participation to the Event and the risks of contamination during travel to/from the Venue, and during the Competition, with all the potential medical and financial consequences that it implies.
